

At the Annual Keeping the Faith Breast Cancer Survivors' Luncheon, we celebrate the lives of those whose hands we can no longer hold. Shelly Walters, daughter of Brynne Marsh and long-time supporter of Revivals, tells us that after Brynne went to Heaven, she found journals that contained Brynne's thoughts while she survived breast cancer and underwent treatment. For the past few years, Shelly has shared words of inspiration and encouragement from Brynne.

At this year's luncheon, during our Legacy Tribute, we specifically celebrated the life of Wendy Tustin of Fernley, Nevada. Her desire was to attend the luncheon for the first time and dance the electric slide. God called her home before she could do that, but we danced hard in her honor. There wasn't enough room on the dance floor so people were on the carpet and on the stage. Those that were not on their feet dancing, were moving to the groove in their seats.

Before, what is now our signature way of having a memorial service at the luncheon, these words from Brynne were read:

When you hit a crisis point in your life, such as dealing with cancer, make yourself just "go with the flow" because that takes away the power of the cancer- you have no fear, so the fear has no life and you're eliminating the cancer at the same time. Talk to your cells, they hear you. I speak to the intelligence of the cancer cells letting them know that they have to leave my body because I need it for good things. I tell them that I have cut off their food supply. This info all goes to the subconscious letting it know what needs to be done inside the body. The body and the mind need a blue print in order to do what you need it to do. What if something negative takes place; are you going to go ballistic? NO, you're going to turn it into something positive. Remember negative breeds negative so change and make it happiness breeds happiness- that's the reality you want to create.

How you perceive things (how they seem in your mind) supplies the way you visualize them.

We each create a concept of whatever we are thinking of, such as good health in every cell in your body; or if it is a concept of a negative sort, then you must release it and let it go, otherwise it becomes a part of your subconscious and then a reality. It is very important to release and let go of anything that could be destructive in your abilities to create a healthy body. Then it becomes important not to say what you don't want like, "I hope I don't" Instead turn that around and say what you do want. This can get a little tricky sometimes, but it almost becomes a game and it surely makes you stop and think. The same goes for how you think.

Don't think it if you don't want it!!!
